Jame Chisholm Profile

James Chisholm, the founder of Studio Tristan Media graduated from Northumbria University's school of law in 2001 and immediately began working for NewsPrints as their in-house contracts manager & sales advisor. Here he assisted in securing over 300 UK newspapers to the company's bespoke online photo sales system and gained vast insight into the marketing and saleability of the assets held by the newspapers and their client in advertising and advertorial.

Having been brought up in his fathers photographic studio James worked from an early age photographing commercial and private work for clients and despite his legal qualifications (and his fathers wishes) maintained his ambition to work in the industry in to which he had been born.

With this in mind James undertook the NCTJ Photojournalism course at Darlington College in 2005 that he passed with distinction thus securing his first job in the newspapers as a Photojournalist at the Dewsbury Reporter.

Thanks to an open minded editor James was allowed to continue to both write and take photo's for the paper for which he was eventually nominated for several awards within the newspaper industry.

In 2007 James was made Commercial Photographic Manager of the Newcastle Chronicle, pioneering the first ever Commercial Photographic department for the Trinity Mirror Group allowing them to offer bespoke commercial PR work for external businesses wishing to use the PR services immediately linked to a publishing house.

In 2008 James was head hunted by a top ten Korean conglomerate, 'Hanwha Group' to handle the PR for their overseas contracts and so upped sticks to Seoul for a one year tenure and the job of a life time!

James has now returned to his native North East and has established Studio Tristan Media in parallel with his family photographic business that has already seen 37 years of success locally, nationally and abroad and hopes that this development will continue to provide the excellent service for which the Studio Tristan name has been famed for across the years.
